Applying for a CONSENT to Create a New Lot? Application Guide Questions & Answers Tips that can help

These tips are intended as a guide to help you decide if your proposed lot might qualify for a severance through the consent process. There are other factors which may be considered in assessing your application for consent.

Is there an Official Plan for your area?

Official Plans are local land use planning documents adopted by a local Municipality or planning board approved by the Province. They reflect Provincial and local planning issues and, among other things; establishes policies for lot creation.

Your proposed lot must conform to requirements of the Official Plan, if any, and have regard to the Provincial Policy Statement under Section 3 of the Planning Act.

Is there a Zoning Order or Zoning By-Law for your area?

Local Zoning By-Laws or Minister's Zoning Orders may exist in your area. They set out specific requirements for new development (eg minimum lot size, frontage, acceptable access, etc.).

Your proposed new lot, as well as the retained parcel must conform to any Zoning controls.

Your Municipal Clerk, Planner or Planning Administrator can help you interpret your local Official Plan and Zoning By-Law.

Is consent the way to go?

Generally, the creation of new lots by consent may be considered where:

- only one or two are proposed;
- the number of lots proposed and created previously from an original land holding conform to the consent policies of an Official Plan;
- the new lot and the remaining lot/lots will have direct access to an existing publicly-owned and maintained road;
- extensions of Municipal or communal sewer or water services are minor and can be done at no cost to your local Municipality.

Where can new lots be created?

Generally, only limited development is permitted in rural areas. This helps protect the natural environment, the natural resources and the character of rural areas and also discourages the inefficient provision of services.

New lots created for permanent, year-round use should be located in existing, built-up areas.

All new lots must be suitable for the intended use. For example: new lots must be large enough to accommodate the proposed building and all servicing requirements.

Where new lots can't be created?

Generally, lots cannot be created on Provincially significant wetlands, prime agricultural lands, lands containing mineral aggregate resources, hazardous lands such as steep slopes and areas susceptible to flooding or where fish or wildlife habitats will be disturbed.

New lots will not be created where they are not compatible with surrounding land uses. For example, a new lot for a house probably would not be permitted next door to a factory, a waste disposal site, a railway mainline or an agricultural operation.

What kind of access do new lots need?

Any new lot must have safe, long-term access for all vehicles, including service and emergency vehicles.

Generally, this means:

- lots should be located on a publicly-owned road(s) which are maintained year-round;
- a limited number of seasonal residential lots on private roads may be considered, on an in-fill basis, provided they won't be converted to permanent residential use and they have registered rights-of-way with direct access to a public road;
- water access may be acceptable for cottage lots if the lots are on an island or in a remote location, where future demand for road access is a reasonable distance to publicly-owned and maintained parking, docking and launching facilities.

What kind of services do new lots need?

In general:

- where municipal sewer and water services exist, lots should hook into that service;
- in other areas, a new lot must be acceptable for the installation of a septic tank and tile bed system and well;
- lake water for cottage lots may be permitted subject to the approval of the Ministry of the Environment and Energy and or local Health Unit.
